Uncertain Outlook for 2003

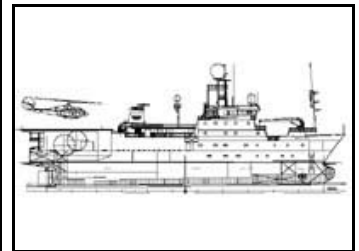

I've been trying to put together a year end review and forecast for 2003 not only for this article, but also to try and get an idea of what Marcon will be doing. I feel like I have been hitting my head against the wall just reading everyone's comments and predictions and have come away knowing little more than when I started. Forecasts seem to be based on shaky premises with a lot of hopes and expectations, but few hard facts that don't seem to contradict each other. I don't know about you, but I keep looking over my shoulder to see what will be coming up next – and I am not just talking about a war in Iraq, strikes in Venezuela or terrorist attacks. Both the business community and politicians worldwide continue with their own surprises. In the United States, according to an American Express survey, many middle-market CFO's say they're having problems forecasting operating budgets accurately for next quarter much less next year. Generally all analysts agree that yes – the year is 2003, but as far as anything else goes your guess is as good as mine. It is always easier reviewing the past than predicting the future.

Marcon vessel and barge sales slowed dramatically in the third quarter 2001 and although inquiries continued at a steady rate, people were "tire-kicking" more than buying. 2002 was a rough year with most operators reporting lower earnings. Companies concentrated on cost reductions, trying to squeeze the last nickel out of their equipment. There was no slack in budgets and most operators took a "wait and see" attitude on purchases unless they had a solid commitment. Most of the vessels changing hands in the U.S. in 2002 were due to corporate consolidation vs. individual purchases. Average asking prices for tugs and supply boats fell in 2002, but not enough to entice many buyers. For most of the year there was a wide gap between what a willing seller thought their equipment was worth and what a willing buyer was willing to pay or could afford. It was not until the fourth quarter did we see some prices starting to fall to levels where buyers took notice. Marcon sold a total of 28 vessels and barges in 2002 compared to 54 vessels and barges in 2001 and 51 in 2000 (plus one corporate division that included 40 additional barges). In 2003 I hope that we will do better and I am projecting a goal of 40 sales.

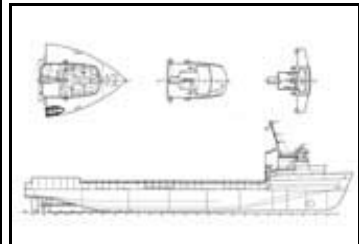

While we all hope for a better 2003, there is a good chance that we will not see a real improvement in the overall economy until 2004. The International Monetary Fund says that they are sticking with their forecast of a 3.7% growth worldwide in 2003, but many private economists believe this may be optimistic. Regretfully the global recovery continues to depend heavily on the United States, which is experiencing weak consumer spending and lackluster growth. I believe that we will see an improvement in the U.S. economy by the end of 2003 in spite of the politicians and falling foreign investment, but have to admit that this is just a 'gut-feeling'. A healthy recovery in Europe's economic picture is not yet in sight – you just have to watch international news covering mass demonstrations and strikes in France's energy, telecommunications, transportation and education sectors and the unhappiness with German economic policies. Japan's economy will continue to be held back by banking and corporate difficulties and South American and Turkish markets remain shaky. There is a bright spot though in that non-Japan Asian economies are expected to grow at more than double the global average -- I just wish the "global average" was better though.....
